

RTV Statement on Peter Osborne and James Arnell

This weekend, two respected and committed Brexiteers have laid out the case for a meaningful extension and final say for the public. We welcome the passionate and reasoned articles from both Peter Osborne (Daily Mail columnist) and James Arnell (Partner, Charterhouse) for their clear-sighted acceptance that the current status quo is not what anyone voted for in 2016.

As Right to Vote, we are campaigning for a final say on Brexit and have always been outcome neutral – it is a confirmatory vote after nearly 3 years of negotiation – a chance for the public to vote for what’s actually on the table rather than some now discredited promises made in 2016.

We are a home for Remainers and Brexiteers alike. We urge all MPs returning to Westminster today to read both articles and join us in pushing ahead for the public to have the final say on these protracted and painful negotiations. It’s clear that adding a final say to whatever Brexit deal is proposed could get a majority through Parliament, take us back from the cliff edge of no-deal this Friday and have Brexit done by Christmas.
